After working in Corporate America for the past 20 years as a sales and marketing executive, Chef Lia decided it was time to start her own business which would allow her make her own schedule and spend more time with her family.

"It was truly a natural decision to become a Personal Chef. When I researched the Personal Chef industry several years ago it sparked my interest as almost all of my free time in the past was spent in the kitchen. You'll find pictures of me only in the kitchen during the holidays and when people come to visit. Doing what I love made sense," says Chef Lia. "This is really a dream come true. The business has really grown since last November. I have been able to provide chef services to all types of clients. Those with dietary issues, people recovering from surgery, families with working parents who need the extra hand to provide nutritious meals for their families, and cooking lessons to beginners and advanced cooks who want to learn new cuisines. Being a Personal Chef and having people enjoy my culinary creations has been the most rewarding work experience I have had!"

Now, during the holidays, is a perfect time to figure out a unique holiday gift for someone special. Chef Lia states, "Many of my clients are the result of friends and relatives purchasing a personal chef gift certificate.
